In the fall of 2002, Suzan-Lori Parks (Pulitzer-prize winning playwright) decided to take on the challenge of writing one play a day for a full year. 365 Days/365 Plays is the successful result, featuring 365 short plays whimsically exploring such divergent topics as sex, war, fairy tales, Indian mythology, American historical figures, love, politics, race, contemporary celebrities--and numerous other issues from American life. The world premiere of these plays was an extraordinary event: From 2006 to 2007 more than 700 theaters in major cities across America performed various pieces or sections from Parks' cycle.

For our production we will stage selections from this body of work to create an entertaining, thought-provoking, and imaginative assortment of contemporary theater pieces.

Nominations Needed for Staff Appreciation

SUBMITTED BY MELISSA MOTL, CIRCULATION COORDINATOR, LIBRARY

The Staff Senate invites the community to nominate staff in order to acknowledge their accomplishments and contributions. The recipients of the Staff Recognition Award will be recognized at the Staff Appreciation Event, March 8th.

To nominate a member of the staff, please complete the Nomination Form, including two letters of recommendation. The nomination form and letters are due by Friday, February 17, at 4:00pm to Missy Motl (CB 314).

This award is intended to recognize exceptional Augsburg staff members who exemplify the mission statement of the college through their actions. Recipients of this award consistently go above and beyond the call of duty by providing exceptional service to others and/or making innovative and outstanding contributions to enhance the objectives of their department or the Augsburg community.

The Nomination Form can be found in the Staff Senate Public Folder.

Engman Prize, Submissions Due Jan. 27

SUBMITTED BY LOIS M. NIELSEN-JOHNS, ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT, SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES

The John Engman Writing Prize, a literary competition sponsored by Murphy Square and the Augsburg English Department, is awarded each year to Augsburg's most promising writers. This year's submission deadline is Friday, January 27th.

Judges of the competition will select up to three winners in each of the categories of fiction, poetry, creative non-fiction, and screenwriting which is being added as a category this year.

To enter writers must submit the following:

Short Fiction – A complete short story of not more than 15 pages

Creative Non-fiction – One complete piece not longer than 15 pages

Poetry – At least three poems. Poetry entries with fewer than three poems will not be accepted

Screenwriting – Up to 30 pages (either a complete short script or a portion of a longer script, such as the first act of a full-length screenplay)

All writers must be enrolled at Augsburg College and may enter once in each of the four categories, but they may only win a prize in one category. Entries may be submitted electronically or by hand.

Paper entries must include five copies of each work submitted and be accompanied by a cover letter, listing the name of the writer and the titles of the work submitted. Names of writers must not be listed on the works submitted. Paper application cover letters and supporting manuscripts must be delivered to the Humanities/Social Science Department Office, Memorial Hall, 111 by 3p.m. on Friday, January 27. This is not a postmark deadline.

Entries submitted electronically should be sent as attachments to nielsen@augsb.org. Specify the genre in the Subject box. Writers submitting in more than one genre should submit separate emails. The body of the email should include the writer's full name and email address and the titles of all pieces submitted.

The prize was named in honor of poet and Augsburg alumnus John Engman who died in 1996. Judges for the contest are English Department faculty members. The judges reserve the right to withhold awards if entries in specific categories are not of winning quality; they may also increase the number of awards in a category that has attracted entries of obvious merit. Winners will be notified in February.
